COURSE DESCRIPTION
In this course, we will explore the process of how social problems are constructed. We will examine the different processes that go into how a problem becomes a social problem. The class is divided into three sections. In the first section, “The Social Problems Process,” we will look at the different theoretical perceptions utilized in constructing social problems, and examine the beginning stages of the process of constructing a social problem. In the second section, “Claiming and Framing Social Problems,” we will examine how problems are framed and public responses to these problems. In the third section, “Policy Making and Outcomes,” we will focus on how social problems lead to social policies, and the outcomes of these policies.

STUDENT LEARNING OBJECTIVES
Upon completion of the course students should be able to:
• Describe and evaluate different perspectives and ideologies of the social problem process.
• Understand theoretical approaches to social problems.
• Recognize strengths and weaknesses in methods of constructing social problems.
• Illustrate and discuss through written examinations and assignments concepts of social problems and different factors that impact the construction of social problems and their policy outcomes.
• Describe how the construction and framing of social problems can affect our societal framework.
