Date: June 2006

On June 9th Dick Pratt returned from two weeks in Ulaanbaatar Mongolia where he continued work on a higher education reform project. The project brings together faculty from colleges and universities across the country for workshops that focus on teaching critical thinking, using active learning strategies, re-designing the curriculum, and assessment. This visit included convening a leadership group drawn from earlier workshops. The project is co-sponsored by the American Center for Mongolian Research, the Academy of Management, Mongolia National University and the Fulbright Senior Specialist Program. Dick first went to Mongolia in 2002 for a conference on Globalization and Development in Mongolia, which was followed by a project on reforming public administration education.
