TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Undergraduate teaching:

Introduction to Community Psychology – History of community psychology; community research methods; human diversity; ecological theory; empowerment; prevention and promotion; social change; program development and evaluation.

Cross-Cultural Psychology (writing intensive course) – Understanding culture; cross-cultural research methods; interacting with people from other cultures; culture and gender; culture and education; culture and work; culture and health.

Community Psychology Advanced Seminar: Community Interventions, Teen Dating Violence – Four-semester sequence where undergraduate and graduate students assembled national and local research findings, created a train-the-trainer curriculum, and trained community providers using the curriculum to raise awareness on the prevalence and correlates of teen dating violence. Students also collaborated with providers in two settings to tailor the curriculum to their specific needs: counselors in public schools, and peer educators at a local community college.

Research Methods – Philosophy of science; research ethics; experimental, quasi-experimental, and non-experimental designs; observational methods; survey research and design; reporting findings using APA format.

Applied Psychology – Psychological principles to address problems in real life; Examples from health psychology, organizational psychology, environmental psychology, forensic psychology, sports psychology, school psychology.

Graduate teaching:

Community Interventions – Methodological approaches to intervention development; intervention strategies within an ecological framework; monitoring interventions; ethical considerations; cost-effectiveness; sustainable interventions.

Introduction to Qualitative Methods – Philosophical tenets of qualitative inquiry; qualitative approaches (narrative research, phenomenology, grounded theory, ethnography, case study); sampling and data collection; observing; interviewing; ethical considerations; reliability and validity; analysis and writing.
